📍 New heights

The twin towers of the newly built World Trade Center loom over New York City on 3 April 1973, the day before their formal dedication. They were the tallest buildings in the world at the time: Tower 1 soared to 417 metres, and Tower 2 was just slightly smaller at 415 metres. Designed by Minoru Yamasaki, construction took seven years to complete. They comprised a major landmark until two aircraft hit the towers during the terrorist attack coordinated by Al-Qaeda on 11 September 2001; the behemoths both collapsed less than two hours after impact.
